

Nov. 21, 1859.

Dear Garrison,

132 Having occasion to write to
C. K. W., I cannot lose the opportunity to enclose a hurried line to you. In the first place, I want to tell you how much gratified I have been in seeing your son George. His life away from home seems to have developed in him a spirit of manly self-reliance that gives promise of great usefulness in the future.
His manners are agreeable, his intelligence manifest to all whom he approaches, and his moral principles firm as a rock. Verily, dear Garrison, you and Helen are blessed of God in the character of your children. May they all fulfil your most exalted anticipations.

[The great crisis of this guilty country seems approaching. The feelings excitement produced by John Brown's desperate invasion and impending death upon the gallows is feeding

Nov. 21, 1859.

Dear Garrison,

132 Having occasion to write to
C. K. W., I cannot lose the opportunity to enclose a hurried line to you. In
the first place, I want to tell you how
much gratified I have been in seeing your
son George. His life away from home
seems to have developed in him a spirit
of manly self-reliance that gives promise of great usefulness in the future.
His manners are agreeable, his intelligence
manifest to all whom he approaches,
and his moral principles firm as
a rock. Verily, dear Garrison, you and Helex are blessed of God in the character of your children. May they
all fulfil your most exalted anticipations.

{ The great crisis of this guilty
country seems approaching. The feelings
excitement produced by John Brown's
desperate invasion and impending
death upon the gallows is feeding